

Teachers know: well-fed students are hungry to learn.

The teachers in our schools have a tough job, but there's a simple way that we can help make that job a little bit easier. We can make sure our kids eat well.

Research shows that kids who eat regular, nutritious meals score higher on standardized tests. And that makes sense, doesn't it? After all, well-fed students pay better attention in class. They participate more enthusiastically. They even tend to behave better. So, sure, they learn more readily.

That's why we prepare and serve nutritious meals for your kids at school. We're here for just one reason: to provide support to the teachers who do the heavy lifting of educating our students. If we can make sure that kids come to class ready to learn, we've helped our teachers accomplish their all-important jobs.

Please join us in saying thanks to our teachers during American Education Week, November 16-20. But let's not stop there. Let's also make sure that when our kids get to the classroom they are well-fed -- and hungry to learn.
